

UC SANTA BARBARA

THE Current

December 10, 2019

Nora Drake

Feminist Futures

A standing-room only crowd gathered in UC Santa Barbara's McCune Conference Room to hear a panel of experts explore the question, 'Why do white women vote for Trump?'

Reflecting on the 2016 election, panelists Jane Junn (USC), Lorrie Frasure-Yokley (UCLA), Justin Gest (George Mason University) and William Marble (Stanford University), as well as UC Santa Barbara's Alice O'Connor, a professor of history, and Edwina Barvosa, a professor of feminist studies, presented research touching on race, gender and class.

Moderated and organized by Pei-te Lien, a professor of political science, the panel discussed not only the outcome of the most recent election but also white women's historical support of the GOP and what voting patterns we might see in the future.

The event was inspired in part by alumnus and donor Blair Hull ('65), a trustee of the UC Santa Barbara Foundation, and served to kick off the Feminist Futures initiative for 2019-2020. Hull sponsors the initiative, overseen by professor of feminist studies and associate dean of social sciences Leila Rupp, which features a yearlong series of events on campus exploring gender and sexuality.

About UC Santa Barbara

The University of California, Santa Barbara is a leading research institution that also provides a comprehensive liberal arts learning experience. Our academic community of faculty, students, and staff is characterized by a culture of interdisciplinary collaboration that is responsive to the needs of our multicultural and global society. All of this takes place within a living and learning environment like no other, as we draw inspiration from the beauty and resources of our extraordinary location at the edge of the Pacific Ocean.